

I, Lorraine Duffy, a Connecticut resident for over 50 years believe that I have earned the right to vote here but, with this right, comes responsibility. I think that I have a civic duty to vote and, since this is important to me, I make the effort to get out and vote. If circumstances prevent me from doing this, I am afforded the right to vote through an absentee ballot.

Most civilized countries require you to be a citizen in order to vote and to prove this citizenship you need to show an ID. For those who do not have driver's licenses a state issued ID is in order. It is beyond a doubt that there is more opportunity for fraud with mass ballots sent out. To even question this is absurd. The government should send a clear message that integrity is important if it really is any more. Citizens should have some faith in the system and few do at this point!

With all the controversy in this past election, at local, state, and national levels, WHY would you even consider this? What are your motives? I see them as questionable!
