

TESTIMONY OF Andrew Clark, IMRP at CCSU

APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE H.B. No. 6439 AN ACT CONCERNING THE STATE BUDGET FOR THE BIENNIUM ENDING JUNE THIRTIETH, 2023, AND MAKING APPROPRIATIONS THEREFOR

Good evening Senator Osten, Representative Walker, Representative Miner, Senator France and other distinguished members of the Appropriations Committee. My name is Andrew Clark and I am here to discuss Connecticut's justice system funding relative to a recent white paper entitled "Connecticut at the Crossroads: COVID-19, the State Budget Crisis and the Path Towards Decarceration, Public Safety and Community Investment." I have incorporated the paper in latter part of my testimony. It can also be found at <https://www.humanrightsnetwork.org/ct-prisons>.

Over the last few months, I have been part of a research team composed of experts from the University Network for Human Rights and the Institute for Municipal and Regional Policy. With assistance from undergraduates at Brown University, the University of Connecticut, the University of Pennsylvania, Stanford, and Wesleyan, our team has written and submitted to you today this 105-page document assessing possible paths forward for criminal justice in Connecticut. Based on evaluation of case-studies of best practices and novel quantitative research, the report recommends that Connecticut move further and more substantively away from the costly and ineffective infrastructure of mass incarceration. We contend that the state must move aggressively toward meaningful systems change by embracing human rights and international standards of justice by instituting justice reinvestment and creating and enhancing educational, vocational, and health programs for incarcerated people. In all these measures, we urge state agencies to increase community stakeholder involvement in criminal justice reform. Only in doing this will Connecticut continue on its path of reducing its prison population, ensuring public safety and making communities whole that have been devastated by mass incarceration.

The recommendations in our paper have received widespread support from directly affected individuals, policy experts, and community members. Nearly 300 stakeholders have signed onto the letter that we present calling for justice reinvestment, increased decarceration, and respect for human rights norms within Connecticut prisons. Among the signatories are concerned citizens, clergy members, college students, and expert professors from Yale University, the University of Connecticut, Wesleyan University, the University of Hartford, Western Connecticut State, and Central Connecticut State Universities. We have also received an outpouring of community support from two dozen leading advocacy organizations and direct services providers. The letter and its signatories are also listed below.

Nearly two full decades ago Connecticut embarked on a journey entitled Justice Reinvestment. With the assistance of the Council of State Governments, the state passed the first such piece of legislation in the nation: <https://csgjusticecenter.org/projects/justice-reinvestment/past-states/connecticut/> The release of the white paper outlining this bold new initiative was brought forth in a 2003 conference held at Central Connecticut State University and co-hosted by then Appropriations Committee Chair, Bill Dyson. Just this week, we hosted virtual Building Bridges 2021: Connecticut at a Crossroads (<https://www.ccsu.edu/imrp/> and <http://ctreentry.org/>). The white paper referenced above was front and center at this event, as was Bill Dyson and many of the advocates who have supported Connecticut's road towards a safer community, coupled with a dismantling of hyper-incarceration.

Many said in 2003 that Connecticut could never achieve such lofty goals as reducing our prison population and achieving greater public safety. We stand here today as the first state in the nation to have cut its prison population in half, while also experiencing the lowest crime rates our state has seen since the 1960s. We urge you to again listen to these voices as Connecticut stands at a crossroads of finally shaking off the shackles of a misguided justice policy that resulted in the wholesale waste of resources and human potential. It won't be accomplished by anything less than bold action and a vision of what can and should be. This white paper outlines such a strategy and the authors and those who support it stand willing to assist you in ensuring Connecticut stands as a beacon of light across the nation, again showing states the way forward to a more just, more humane future that benefits all its citizens.

Dear Connecticut Legislator,

We, the undersigned, write now to support proposals to reduce the use of incarceration in the state's criminal justice system and to reinvest resources from prison and jail funding into community-driven reentry initiatives and programs. We understand that the State General Assembly will begin the appropriations process during the 2021 legislative session. We recognize that due to the continuing COVID-19 pandemic, the state faces difficult budgetary tradeoffs and decisions. In this context, we urge you to consider the following proposals:

- reduce spending on prisons and the related infrastructure and personnel involved in incarceration. This should not be understood as support for measures that seek to reduce per capita spending in the prison system but rather as support for reducing the number of those incarcerated;
- prioritize investments in communities directly affected by criminal enforcement;
- make detention, when necessary, more humane;
- provide greater educational and employment training to those incarcerated; and
- invest in community-led reentry programs and initiatives.

In this regard, we have reviewed the analysis and recommendations contained in the document "Connecticut at the Crossroads: COVID-19, the State Budget Crisis and the Path Towards Decarceration, Public Safety and Community Investment." The document is the result of research and analysis by experts at the University Network for Human Rights, based on campus at Wesleyan University in Middletown, and the Institute for Municipal and Regional Policy at Central Connecticut State University in New Britain, in consultation with a broad range of stakeholders.

We urge you to carefully review the proposals and supporting information and analysis in the document as you decide how best to invest the resources entrusted to you by the people of Connecticut. We, the undersigned, are available to assist you and to provide further information during your work.

With our appreciation and wishes for a successful legislative session.

Signed,
