Section 1 also allows a new home construction contractor to engage in home improvement work resulting in a potential revenue loss to the state if these contractors seek to engage in this additional work. Current law requires new home construction contractors to receive a home improvement contractor license which has a $120 annual fee in order to perform this additional work. There are approximately 2,300 new home construction contractors and 26,000 home improvement contractors licensed by DCP.

Section 3 changes the new home construction contractors' guaranty fund contributions from $480 biennially to $240 annually and results in no fiscal impact in FY 22 and 23.

Section 4 increases the definition of home improvement by including alarm system work that doesn't involve a licensed electrician resulting in a potential revenue gain to the state if additional home improvement licenses are applied for. The fee for a home improvement contractor license is $120.

Section 8 requires new home construction contractors who opt to engage in home improvement work to pay a $100 fee to the Home Improvement Guaranty Fund resulting in a potential revenue gain to the extent these contractors engage in home improvement work.
