Explanation

The bill potentially broadens parole eligibility for certain offenders who were under 21 years of age when they committed a crime resulting in a potential marginal savings to the Department of Correction to the extent that additional inmates are granted parole.

House "A" strikes the underlying bill and the associated fiscal impact, resulting in the impact described above.

Senate "A" amends the original bill, which has no effect on the fiscal impact of the bill as amended by House "A."

The Out Years

The annualized ongoing fiscal impact identified above would continue into the future subject to the number of inmates who meet the expanded criteria and are granted parole.
